A note from the creative team:

The year was 2019... Myles Luongo approached Chris Renaud with the opportunity to tell a story about family and brotherhood. They never imagined, however, the relationship that would stem from that point as they became a powerful writing duo, strengthened by their real friendship.

Beyond Us is their premiere work, written to honor the life of Myles's cousin Barry, who grew up in the small town of Amherst, New Hampshire, and how he was profoundly influenced by the community around him. Drawing from family stories and the experiences of the writers — as they themselves grew up in New Hampshire — they created a story of family and love. The characters of this show grow with each other through the years, maturing, and learning how to cope with the things beyond their control.

Beyond Us itself has grown and changed since its origin, just as Myles and Chris have. Through Scotch'n Soda, this show has evolved with us and allowed the student organization to reflect on what it means to be a "brotherhood." By portraying these characters, we can connect them to our own lives and ponder the question: what is beyond us? This not only allows the play to flourish but our relationships as well. Through this production, the creative team looks to invoke a sense of intimacy that exists not only within the show but within the team and audience as well.

Every day, things happen that are out of our control. Beyond us. However, we can learn to cope through the love of family and friendship to understand the purpose this may have on our lives. Through this show, not only do we see the highs and lows of the characters, but at the same time, we ask ourselves: How do we move forward in life through the moments of pleasure and pain?
